Scarlet fever and Invasive Group A Strep advice

Scarlet fever is a contagious infection that mostly affects young children. It's easily treated with antibiotics. The first signs of scarlet fever can be flu-like symptoms, including a high temperature, a sore throat and swollen neck glands (a large lump on the side of the neck).

A rash appears 12 to 48 hours later. It looks like small, raised bumps and starts on the chest and tummy, then spreads. The rash makes skin feel rough, like sandpaper. On white skin the rash looks pink or red. It may be harder to see on brown and black skin, but you can still feel it. A white coating also appears on the tongue. This peels, leaving the tongue red, swollen and covered in little bumps (called "strawberry tongue"). The rash does not appear on the face, but the cheeks can look red. The redness may be harder to see on brown and black skin. The symptoms are the same for children and adults, although scarlet fever is less common in adults.

Contact a GP if your child:

- has scarlet fever symptoms
- does not get better in a week (after seeing a GP)
- has scarlet fever and chickenpox at the same time
- is ill again, weeks after scarlet fever got better – this can be a sign of a complication, such as rheumatic fever
- is feeling unwell and have been in contact with someone who has scarlet fever

Scarlet fever is very easily spread. Check with a GP before you go in. They may suggest a phone consultation.

As a parent, if you feel your child seems seriously unwell, you should trust your own judgement. You can also contact NHS 111 for advice.
